Category:PrintersQ: How do I generate a compact, updated profile for my OS X installation?

I would like to create an updated standard OS X install to serve as my current machine. The problem is that I have no machine to install it to. If I install the OS X installer it wants to install on an existing partition/drive. What I'd like to do is to create a new partition from free space and install the OS to that. How can I have an updated standard OS X installation? A: This is what I do. Install the OS on a spare partition. Boot from a bootable USB and reinstall bootloader and then the OS on the freshly created partitions Once the OS has been updated to the latest release, you can re-install the bootloader and make the existing partition your bootloader partition. Since you can install to a free partition, making sure that your existing partitions are defragmented can make things easier as you don't need to install OSX to the right size partition. This is even easier if you have a Mac with bootable USB drive and a working internet connection. Q: f678ea9f9e
