It's been a looong while since I posted anything. I'm back today with a simple DIY cross stitch necklace. It's perfect for this time of the year when you want to show your love for Fall. Supplies Stitchery looks a little different from my previous posts, as we're using a darning needle, not a sewing needle. There are some great videos on YouTube using a sewing needle instead. This is a double crochet stitch so I used an 8 mm crochet hook and silk thread to start off. You can use any size hook or yarn, but just be sure you can easily put it back through the fabric. To get started, thread one end of the silk cord through the crochet hook and then pull it through the fabric. It will leave a loop of yarn at the back. Pull the cord all the way through, as close to the front as possible. We will be using double crochet to make a single strand of chain stitch. Thread the yarn from the needle through the loop left by the silk cord. Pull the yarn all the way through. Chain stitch can be in any yarn and size, but we're using this dark brown yarn for this example. Now that we have one chain stitch, we need two more. Bring the yarn from the back through the loop and pull all the way through. Chain stitch is made up of two chain stitches and one chain stitch. Now bring the yarn from the front through the back loop. Pull the yarn through all the way and leave a loop at the back. We need two more back loops. Bring the yarn from the back through the back loop and then bring it through the loop left by the silk cord. Three strands of chain stitch. If you are using a different size hook or yarn, the numbers will change, but the principle is the same. This is a nice way to use up the leftover silk thread that you have lying around. All you have to do now is take the thread back through the silk thread. I suggest starting with the silk thread facing up and working it back into the single crochet stitch. You can use any yarn
